Iraq Blast Kills 5 U.S. Soldiers

Suicide bomber strikes in heavily guarded sector of Baghdad

BAGHDAD | A suicide bomber killed five U.S. soldiers as they chatted with shop owners while on a foot patrol in central Baghdad on Monday, the deadliest attack on American forces in the heavily fortified capital in more than eight months.

The bombing, just four days after nearly simultaneous blasts killed scores of people in a vibrant Shiite commercial district, again showed the insurgents' ability to strike inside a capital secured by hundreds of security checkpoints, U.S.-funded neighborhood watch groups and hundreds of miles of blast walls that surround buildings and cordon off districts.

The military insists that recent attacks do not point to a growing trend in violence, and continues to tout the security gains achieved over the past year. At any rate, the push over the past six months to place U.S. bases inside neighborhoods and get soldiers out of their armored vehicles increases the Americans' vulnerability to attacks. While the face-to-face contact from foot patrols builds goodwill, it also gives suicide bombers, who often slip past security vehicle checkpoints by walking, better access to striking soldiers.

On Monday, the soldiers were walking in the predominantly Sunni Mansour neighborhood when a man in his 30s detonated his explosives about 30 feet away, said a police officer who witnessed the attack. (AP)

MASCULINITY

Then the Mayor Will Crush Beer Cans on His Forehead

Mayor Ryan Bingham of Torrington, Conn., plans to defend his town's honor Saturday in a charity bout against Northeast Wrestling performer Kurt Adonis. It's at least the second ring appearance for Bingham — he cost Adonis a win in the same charity event last year by tripping him while acting as the corner man for Adonis' opponent. Adonis says he and his partner, the "Torrington Executioner," will pound on Bingham a bit, then finish him off with "The Superkick." "I plan on kicking his head off," Adonis said. (AP)

A pale-bellied bird species last seen in the 1920s and long thought to be extinct has been rediscovered near Papua New Guinea. Hadoram Shirihihi, who led an expedition to find the seabird, returned with photographs of more than 30 of the birds. His photographs and report were published in the Bulletin of the British Ornithologists' Club on Friday. (AP)

Domino's Is Gross, And You Can't Sue Us

An appeals court in Northern Ireland has overturned an unprecedented libel verdict in which a pizzeria owner successfully sued a newspaper over a rotten review. The judge ruled that a Belfast jury erred last year when it awarded $50,000 to the owner of Goodfellas in Belfast. A 2000 review had deemed his restaurant smoky, sloppy and unappetizing. The judge said the jury failed to consider whether the reviewer demonstrated malice, and would have been likely to rule in the newspaper's favor if they'd been instructed correctly. (AP)

Spitzer's Future Uncertain

Opponents call for governor's resignation over call girl scandal

NEW YORK | Gov. Eliot Spitzer, the crusading politician who built his career on rooting out corruption, apologized Monday after allegations surfaced that he paid thousands of dollars for a high-end call girl. He did not elaborate on the scandal, which drew calls for his resignation.

At a hastily called news conference, Spitzer stood next to his

“I have disappointed and failed to live up to the standard I expected of myself,” he said. “I must now dedicate some time to regain the trust of my family.”

As he walked out, reporters shouted: “Will you resign?” He did not answer.

The New York Democrat's involvement in the ring was caught on a federal wiretap as part of an investigation, according to a law enforcement official who spoke to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity.

papers as the Emperors Club VIP, were arrested last week. The ring arranged connections between wealthy men and more than 50 prostitutes in New York, Washington, Los Angeles, Miami, London and Paris, prosecutors said.

According to the law enforcement official, Spitzer is the person identified in legal papers as “Client 9,” who paid to bring the prostitute named “Kristen” from New York to Washington for a four-hour tryst at a hotel on Feb. 13. The court papers gave this account of the encounter:

A defendant, Temeka Rachelle Lewis, confirmed that Client 9 would be “paying for everything — train tickets, cab fare from the hotel and back, mini bar or room service, travel time, and hotel.”

The client paid $4,300 in cash to the service, with some being used for the encounter and the rest apparently to be used for credit.

The prostitute, who authorities described as a “petite, pretty brunette, 5-foot-5 inches, and 105 pounds,” met the client at about 10 p.m.

Spitzer has not been charged, and prosecutors did not comment on the case. AMY WESTFELD (AP)

Cheney to Talk Peace, Oil During Visit to Mideast

WASHINGTON | President Bush, dispatching Vice President Dick Cheney to the Middle East, said the goal of the trip is to get Israelis and Palestinians to hold firm to the promises they've made toward peace.

Bush on Monday said Cheney would "reassure people that the United States is committed to a vision of peace in the Middle East."

Oil is also on his agenda, as the White House continues to push for greater oil production in the Mideast.

The vice president's visit comes on the heels of a brief mission to the Mideast by Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice. She was able to pressure the moderate Palestinian leadership to resume peace talks with Israel, which broke off after an Israeli military incursion into Gaza. (AP)

Obama: Democrats Must Choose

Senator shoots down talk of his serving as Clinton's vice president

COLUMBUS, MISS. | Democrat Barack Obama ridiculed the idea of being Hillary Rodham Clinton's running mate Monday, saying voters must choose between the two for the top spot on the fall ticket.

The Illinois senator used his first public appearance of the week to knock down the notion that he might accept the party's vice presidential nomination. He noted that he has won more states, votes and delegates than Clinton so far.

"I don't know how somebody who is in second place is offering the vice presidency to the person who is in first place," Obama said, drawing a long standing ovation from about 1,700 people in Columbus, Miss.

Saying he wanted to be "absolutely clear," he added: "I don't want anybody here thinking that somehow, 'Well, you know, maybe I can get both.' Don't think that way.

"I am not running for vice president," Obama said. "I am running for president of the United States of America."

He told the audience that it made no sense for Clinton to suggest he is not ready to be president and then hint that she might hand him the job that could make him president at a moment's notice.

"If I'm not ready, how is it that you think I should be such a great vice president?" he said.

Clinton and her husband had

SEN. BARACK OBAMA

suggested recently that a Clinton-Obama ticket would be formidable against Sen. John McCain.

"A lot of Democrats like us both and have been very hopeful that they wouldn't have to make a choice, but, obviously, Democrats have to make a choice and I'm looking forward to getting the nomination," Clinton said Monday in Scranton, Pa. "And it's preliminary to talk about whoever might be on whose ticket."

Kin Could Play Role in Alzheimer's

Study: When both parents have disease, offspring's risk rises

CHICAGO | One parent with Alzheimer's disease is tough enough, but imagine the memory-robbing illness striking both parents — and knowing chances are high you'll get it, too. A study of more than 100 families for the first time gauges the size of that risk.

"I'm scared," said Jackie Lustig, 52, of Sudbury, Mass., whose father died of Alzheimer's and whose mother is living it. "I'm hoping to heck that the pharmaceutical companies come up with something better than there is now. It's not a nice way to go."

The study, appearing in March's

Archives of Neurology, found more than 22 percent of the adult children of 111 couples with Alzheimer's had the disease themselves. Risk grew with age. Among offspring older than 60, more than 30 percent were affected. In those older than 70, nearly 42 percent had the disease.

Prior studies have found a 6 to 13 percent prevalence of the disease in the U.S. population older than 65.

Senior study author Dr. Thomas Bird of the University of Washington said he was uncomfortable saying the normal Alzheimer's risk tripled or quadrupled in people with two affected parents because the study was small and had no comparison group.

"What I'm comfortable saying is that risk is increased and we're working on trying to find out what the magnitude is," Bird said.

Israel Scales Back Gaza Operations

Prime Minister denies talk of cease-fire with Hamas during calm

JERUSALEM | Israel's prime minister ordered the army to scale back operations in Gaza on Monday after a sharp drop in Palestinian rocket fire, raising the possibility of a wider truce that would ease the path for peace talks.

Ehud Olmert denied talk of a cease-fire with Gaza's Hamas rulers but said there was no need to attack

Gaza as long as calm prevailed.

Hamas said it was encouraged by the relative lull, saying it proved that attacks on Israel were paying off. The militant group wants an agreement that would include opening the Gaza Strip's shuttered borders.

Israel, concerned that calm could enable the militants to rearm, said it reserves the right to strike at will.

The army said no rockets were fired Monday, and Israel has not carried out any airstrikes or land raids in Gaza since Wednesday. Last week, militants fired an average of more than a dozen rockets per day, while the army struck hard in Gaza, leaving more than 120 Palestinians dead, according to Palestinian medical officials.

The past few days have seen no serious Israeli casualties from rocket fire, though Palestinian militants killed two Israeli soldiers Thursday along the Gaza border. Later that day, a Palestinian fired on students at a Jewish seminary in Jerusalem, killing eight before he was shot and killed. ARON HELLER (AP)

Aussie Magazine Apologizes for Report on Harry

SYDNEY, AUSTRALIA | An Australian magazine apologized Monday to readers and troops serving abroad for publishing a story revealing that Prince Harry was fighting with British troops in Afghanistan.

New Idea magazine said when it ran the story in January it was unaware of an agreement between the British Ministry of Defense and major news organizations not to disclose Harry's deployment to protect the 23-year-old prince and his fellow soldiers.

The report went largely unnoticed until last February when the Drudge Report published it, citing the magazine and a German publication.

Report: 30,000 Flee Western Kenya

KITALE, KENYA | The army used heavy firepower Monday to crack down on a group linked to bloody clashes over land, officials in western Kenya said, a day before parliament was to debate and possibly adopt a power-sharing deal.

The violence in the western Mount Elgon region underlines how difficult it will be for Kenya to retreat from the edge of violent breakup, even though politicians who clashed bitterly for weeks over a disputed presidential election now are talking about peace.

Fred Kapondi, a Mount Elgon member of parliament, said people were fleeing "aerial bombing and harassment from the army."

However, Mohamud Birik, the local district commissioner, denied that the army was targeting villagers.

Ochiemo Cheptai, who identified himself as chairman of the Mount Elgon chapter of the Kenya Red Cross, said 30,000 people fled their homes after the army began pursuing members of the Sabaot Land Defense Force on Sunday.

But Red Cross officials in Nairobi challenged the 30,000 figure, saying they have not yet assessed the amount of people who were fleeing. (AP)

Vatican Revises List of Sinful Acts

Official names drugs, pollution among new types of bad behavior

VATICAN CITY | In olden days, the deadly sins included lust, gluttony and greed. Now, the Catholic Church says pollution, drugs and genetic experiments are on its updated thou-shalt-not list.

Also receiving fresh attention by the Vatican was social injustice, along the lines of the age-old maxim: "The rich get richer while the poor get poorer."

In the Vatican's latest update on how God's law is being violated in today's world, Monsignor Gianfranco Girotti, the head of the Apostolic Penitentiary, was asked by the Vatican newspaper L'Osservatore Romano what, in his opinion, were the "new sins."

He cited "violations of the basic rights of human nature" through genetic manipulation, drugs that "weaken the mind" and the imbalance between the rich and poor.

"If yesterday sin had a rather

THE NEW 7 DEADLY SINS

As named by Vatican official Monsignor Gianfranco Girotti in a Vatican newspaper on Sunday:

- 1 Polluting the environment
- 2 Genetic engineering
- 3 Being obscenely rich
- 4 Dealing drugs
- 5 Abortion
- 6 Pedophilia
- 7 Causing social injustice

individualistic dimension, today it has a weight, a resonance, that's especially social, rather than individual," said Girotti, whose office deals with matters of conscience and grants absolution.

It's not the first time that the Vatican has sought to put a modern spin on sin. Last year, the Vatican took on the problem of highway accidents, issuing a kind of Ten Commandments for drivers against the sins of road rage.

Vatican officials stressed that Girotti's comments broke no new ground on what constitutes sin.

Nepalese police detain a Tibetan pro-

Tibetan March Is Blocked

Police prevent exiles from protesting against the Beijing Olympics

DHARMSALA, INDIA | Police blocked hundreds of Tibetan exiles Monday from leaving an area near this northern Indian city at the start of a planned six-month march to Tibet to protest China's hosting the Summer Olympics.

The march got under way on the anniversary of a failed Tibetan uprising against Chinese rule that forced the Dalai Lama, the Tibetan Buddhist spiritual leader, into exile in 1959.

A recommendation by the Indian government led to the order banning the marchers from leaving the area outside Dharamsala where they stopped for the night, local police chief Atul Fulzele said.

Tenzin Tsundue, one of the march leaders, said the Tibetan exiles have not decided whether to defy the ban.

The monks were demanding the release of monks detained last October when the Dalai Lama was given a Congressional Gold Medal in Washington, an honor that infuriated the Chinese government.

Protesters also rallied in New Delhi and in Katmandu, Nepal, where 10 activists were detained after hundreds clashed with police.

Navy Doctor Jail Term Cut

Officer was convicted of taping midshipmen having sex in his home

ANNAPOLIS, MD. | The military has reduced a sentence for a Navy doctor ordered to serve more than 3 1/2 years in prison for using a hidden camera to record Naval Academy midshipmen having sex, a Navy spokesman said Monday.

Cmdr. Kevin Ronan will now serve two years if he is a model prisoner, said Guy Schein, a spokesman for the Navy Bureau of Medicine and Surgery in Washington, where Ronan was assigned.

In November, a jury of six Navy captains gave Ronan a 46-month term in the Navy brig and ordered his dismissal from the military. He had been convicted of conduct unbecoming an officer, illegal wiretapping and obstruction of justice. He began serving his sentence shortly afterward.

Navy prosecutors had asked for the 46-month sentence because it was equal to the time a midshipman spends at the academy in Annapolis. But Vice Adm. Adam M. Robinson, the Navy's surgeon general, decided last week to reduce the sentence, Schein said.

Schein said Robinson weighed the benefit of keeping Ronan confined for the full sentence, the expense of confinement and a belief that Ronan had been sent a significant message about his actions.

Ronan's lawyer, William Ferris, said he was disappointed the entire sentence was not remitted.

Ronan is being confined in the U.S. Naval Consolidated Brig in Charleston, S.C.

Ronan denied making the recordings during testimony at his trial but acknowledged he bought an air purifier with a hidden camera. Ronan's defense was that the tapes were made by midshipmen in an effort to extort money from him.

Navy prosecutors alleged Ronan used the camera to tape the male midshipmen having sex with girlfriends or masturbating while they stayed in guest bedrooms at his Annapolis home.

The midshipmen were there as part of an academy program that places students in private homes during their free time.

Gas Poised to Hit Record in March

With the travel season still months away, fuel nears $3.23 per gallon

NEW YORK | Gasoline prices were poised Monday to set a new record at the pump, having surged to within half a cent of their record high of $3.227 per gallon. Oil prices, meanwhile, surged above $108 per barrel to a new inflation-adjusted record and their fifth new high in the last six sessions on an upbeat report on wholesale inventories.

The national average price of a gallon of gas rose 0.7 cent overnight to $3.222 per gallon, 69 cents higher than one year ago, according to AAA and the Oil Price Information Service. Last May, prices peaked at $3.227 as surging demand and a string of refinery outages raised concerns about supplies.

That record will likely be left in the dust soon as gas prices accelerate toward levels that could approach

The national average price of gasoline peaked at $3.227 per gallon in May 2007.

$4 per gallon, though most analysts believe prices will peak below that psychologically significant mark. In its last forecast, released last month, the Energy Department said prices will likely peak around $3.40 per gallon this spring; a new forecast is due Tuesday.

Retail gas prices are following crude oil, which has jumped 25 percent in a month. (AP)

Atlantic City Breaks Losing Streak

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. | What a difference a day makes.

February revenue at Atlantic City's 11 gambling halls increased by 1.5 percent over the same month a year ago — due mainly to an extra February day this leap year.

Regardless of why it happened, the end of a 10-month losing streak was good news in a resort town desperately looking for some amid an economic slowdown that has threatened at least one new mega-casino project. For more than a year, the city has also been struggling to fend off competition from out-of-state slots parlors.

"You're not throwing your hat in the air, but we'll take victories where we can get them," said Mark Juliano, chief executive officer of Trump Entertainment Resorts, which operates three casinos here. (AP)

It's Tough to Pick The Nation's Best

MORE THAN 300 DIVISION I teams have played roughly 30 games and just completed the regular season. So, picking the best of the bunch should be easy, right? Think again.

An argument can be made for four or five teams, all of which are eyeing a top seed when the NCAA tournament brackets are announced this Sunday. At least two of those teams will likely be on the outside looking in at the Final Four once the upsets get going.

But before we get a week ahead of ourselves, you can make the case for UNC, Memphis, UCLA, Kansas and Tennessee as the nation's best team as of now.

It's hard to dispute Memphis, which enjoyed the most success in the regular season. The Tigers lost just one game — a four-point defeat against then-No. 2 Tennessee — and their resume includes double-digit victories over Georgetown and Connecticut.

Does that make Memphis the best? Sorry, the Tigers still can't make a free throw. I'd also scratch off UNC, with two losses, because the Tar Heels' defense seems suspect.

Finding a knock against Tennessee is hard. The Vols are good, and Bruce Pearl is an excellent coach. At this point, it's all subjective, and UCLA and Kansas just look better.

To break the tie, we'll take the Bruins' Final Four experience, star freshman Kevin Love and Georgetownesque luck to crown them our regular season champ.

Season Has Offered Few Answers

Wizards will decide on their stars without seeing their potential

WIZARDS | Right now, the pains are in a hip and a knee. This summer, it may be the Wizards' brain trust with the headache.

While the absence of Gilbert Arenas and Caron Butler for long periods has been the dominant story for the team this season, the upcoming offseason personnel puzzle may be more challenging.

Despite a knee injury that's kept him from playing since November, Arenas insists he'll opt out of the final year of his contract at season's end. Arenas will undoubtedly pursue a maximum contract, which would be a multi-year escalating deal starting at more than $14 million per season. Meanwhile, All-Star Antawn Jamison is in the last season of a six-year deal that pays him $16.3 million this season.

While the NBA's collective bargaining agreement and soft salary cap mean the Wizards can outbid other teams to keep their own free agents, the expiring contracts bring up an interesting question: Would the Wizards be better re-signing their stars or tinkering with their roster in hopes of taking the next step?

There's no doubt the Arenas-Butler-Jamison trio has re-energized an organization that was in the cellar of the Eastern Conference for two decades. However, Washington has made it past the first round only once in the past three years and has not sniffed the conference finals.

With all the injuries, the Big Three didn't get a chance to prove they could get it done this year, their third full season together.

"Nobody's feeling sorry for you in the league," Wizards guard Roger Mason said. "There's plenty of teams that have injuries."

Jamison is the leader of this team. The forward has been fairly durable during his tenure in D.C., but he will be 32 years old next season.

Still, the first order of business for Washington's executives will be trying to predict if Arenas can return to pre-injury form. The guard has played just eight games since last April, having had a second knee surgery in November. But he averaged 22.4 points on a bum knee and is among the most marketable players in the league. If another team stepped up and lured Arenas away, Washington could be hard-pressed to find an immediate replacement

Wade Is Sidelined for the Season

Miami decides to sit its superstar with 21 games left in the year

NBA | Dwyane Wade's season with the Miami Heat is over.

Heat coach Pat Riley announced Monday that Wade, the All-Star guard and 2006 NBA finals MVP who has battled left knee pain throughout the season, will not play in Miami's final 21 games.

"I think it's time," Riley said.

The move was expected, although the timing — with so much of the season still to play — was mildly surprising. But Wade missed Miami's game against the Golden State Warriors on Friday because of knee stiffness.

The next day, Wade looked strong playing in Atlanta. But with all hope of the playoffs gone, the Heat — the NBA's worst team at 11-50 — and Wade decided Monday that the time was right to give the franchise's best player additional time to heal and rest.

As recently as last Thursday, Wade said that even though the knee is sore, he wanted to continue playing.

"I don't want to cut my minutes back," Wade said, when asked why he still wanted to play this season. "If it's going to happen, it's going to happen. And whenever that day is, if it comes, I'll just start preparing for the summer and rehabbing. But the day is not today."

The day came four days later.

"I'm just trying to stay positive right now," Heat forward Shawn Marion said. "All you can do, really." TIM REYNOLDS (AP)

Hibbert Is Repeat For All-Big East

COLLEGE HOOPS | Georgetown's Roy Hibbert is the only repeat selection on the All-Big East Conference basketball team.

Hibbert was a unanimous first-team selection, along with Connecticut's A.J. Price, Louisville's David Padgett and Notre Dame's Luke Harangody, the league announced Monday. Each player helped his team earn a first-round bye in the Big East Tournament.

Others on the first team are Connecticut's Jeff Adrien, Notre Dame's Kyle McAlarney, Cincinnati's Deonta Vaughn, Pittsburgh's Sam Young, Seton Hall's Brian Laing, USF's Kentrell Gransberry and West Virginia's Joe Alexander. (AP)

GW's Trying Season Ends Too Early

After 3 straight NCAA tourneys, Colonials don't make the A-10

COLONIALS HOOPS | Just two years ago, the George Washington men's basketball team won the regular season conference title and was a No. 8 seed in the NCAA tournament before losing to top-seeded Duke in the second round. Last year, the Colonials won the Atlantic-10 tournament and were a No. 11 seed in the big dance. This year, they won't even play in the A-10 tournament.

Saturday night's 67-63 loss to Massachusetts did not have much at stake. GW (9-17, 5-10 A-10) was eliminated from the A-10 tournament for the first time since 1974 when Fordham won just before the Colonials took the court. GW had dropped to 13th in the conference after a loss to Charlotte on March 6, and only the top 12 of 14 teams get a chance at the tournament, which starts Wednesday.

"I'm a little disappointed the season has come to an end," coach Karl Hobbs, the A-10 coach of the year in 2006, said after the last loss. "I'm just starting to reflect on the rebuilding process now."

Two years after being named Atlantic 10 coach of the year, Karl Hobbs suffered through a 9-17 season, and GW missed the A-10 tourney for the first time since 1974.

The Colonials' rapid descent began, as it often does, with the graduation of key players. Forward/center Pops Mensah-Bonsu and J.R. Pinnock both left for the NBA draft in 2006. But last year's squad overachieved. They were picked to finish fifth in the A-10 yet won the conference tournament to make the NCAA tournament for the third straight year.

This year's team didn't have as much luck. After losing the program's winningest player, Carl Elliot, the Colonials were plagued by constant adjustments to their roster and style of play.

Starting guard Travis King, who was expected to be a key contributor after a solid freshman year, was lost for the season in August after tearing his ACL. Maureece Rice was the A-10 championship's most valuable player in 2007 and toyed with the idea of going pro, but he never got back to his old form and was dismissed from the team on March 6 for breaking unspecified team rules.

The Colonials also made adjustments to their defense, which became a matchup zone by the end of the season.

"We thought we'd be a work in progress through the season and that held out," Hobbs said. "We were reinventing ourselves."

"What I'm hoping is we take this year, we mature from it, we learn some lessons, and we learn how to conduct ourselves on and off the court. This year is a rebuilding situation. We'll take our time rebuilding it block by block." ASH MCDANIEL

Park Is Perfect For 3 Innings Against the O's

ORIOLES | The next time Joe Torre sees his Dodgers play, it will be on another continent. He can only hope Chan Ho Park performs as well in China as in the United States.

Park pitched three perfect innings Monday to keep his ERA spotless and lead Los Angeles past the Baltimore Orioles 7-4.

Torre and a split squad of Dodgers will leave Tuesday for Orlando to catch their flight to Beijing. The team will play a two-game weekend series against the San Diego Padres.

Park will pitch in one of those games. If he keeps throwing as he has this spring, the right-hander will be pitching for the Dodgers in the regular season, too.

"Early on in the spring, he had trouble locating inside. He had everything today," Torre said. (AP)

UNC Stays Atop AP Poll After Beating Duke

COLLEGE HOOPS | North Carolina's weekend win over Duke kept the Tar Heels on top of The Associated Press' college basketball poll Monday.

The top five teams held their spots from last week in the next-to-last poll of the season.

The Tar Heels (29-2), who beat Duke 76-68 to win the Atlantic Coast Conference regular-season title, received 52 first-place votes and 1,776 points from the 72-member national media panel.

Memphis (30-1), which finished its second straight unbeaten season in Conference USA with convincing wins over SMU and UAB, held second with 13 first-place votes. UCLA (28-3) was third, Tennessee (28-3) was fourth, and Kansas was fifth. (AP)

Trachsel Relishes His Dual Roles

Orioles pitcher will be a starter and a teacher for the young staff

ORIOLES | Steve Trachsel has 141 career wins, exactly 80 more than the combined total of the other four pitchers in the Orioles' projected starting rotation. When Trachsel threw his first pitch in the major leagues, Adam Loewen was 9.

Loewen, now 23, can learn plenty from a guy like Trachsel, who's happy to share the wisdom he's gained from 14 big league seasons.

"He's been helping me out with my routine. I didn't really have one for when I was warming up in the bullpen," Loewen said.

The Orioles signed Trachsel to a minor league contract in February, but there was little doubt at the time that he would end up in the rotation. He went 6-8 with a 4.48 ERA in Steve Trachsel, 37, went 6-8 with a 4.48 ERA in 25 starts in Baltimore last year.

25 starts with Baltimore last season before being dealt to the Cubs.

His return to Baltimore is beneficial to both parties. The Orioles get a guy who can eat up innings and provide stability and instruction to a young, inexperienced staff. Trachsel, in turn, receives another chance to pitch in the majors.

"I wasn't going to go to another team and be an insurance policy," Trachsel said. "That's what happened when I got traded last year. I went to Chicago and basically didn't do anything. It's not fun."

His workload in Baltimore might prove too tough to handle. Not only does the 37-year-old have to prepare for the season, but he's also been asked to tutor those around him. His leadership role wasn't penned into his contract, but it certainly was discussed before he signed.

"They mentioned it," Trachsel said. "I've got to find a balance of when to talk to guys and who to talk to and who to leave alone on the day they pitch. I'm definitely not talking to anybody on the day I pitch." DAVID GINSBURG (AP)

Milledge remains hot, going 2-for-2 in a 4-3 loss to the Tigers

NATIONALS | Justin Verlander is looking good.

The Detroit Tigers' ace threw three scoreless innings, striking out three and walking none in Monday's 4-3 victory over the Washington Nationals.

AUTO RACING | A day after Tony Stewart assailed Goodyear, three other drivers echoed his complaints — but without the same venom.

Material Rock Star

As a pioneer of music video, Madonna is now a hall-of-famer

STAR BRIGHT | Madonna has been many things in her 26-year career.

The Material Girl has been a pop star, a video star, a movie star, a singer, a songwriter, an author, a dancer, a label exec, a producer and, most recently, a director.

Calling her a rocker, though, is a bit of a stretch.

Yes, there are a handful of borderline rock songs in her catalog, and she did learn the guitar for her "Music" tour. But Madonna is a pop star. Still, last night she was inducted into the Hall of Fame along with John Mellencamp, the Ventures, the Dave Clark Five and Leonard Cohen.

Does her pop-star image mean Madonna is unworthy of being in such prestigious rock 'n' roll company? Of course not.

"To me, it's the same issue as last year with Grandmaster Flash and does hip-hop belong in?" says Jim Henke, vice president of exhibitions at the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in Cleveland. "I think here at the museum and among other inductees, we've always defined rock 'n' roll pretty broadly. It's not just about four guys with guitars or something like that. Madonna certainly had a huge impact on popular music and rock 'n' roll throughout the '80s and '90s and she's certainly deserving of being honored."

STRIKE A POSE: At the height of her image-honing, Madonna was setting new standards in fashion, music, dance and video. That's Hall-of-Fame-style innovation.

Henke points to Madonna's incorporation of dance elements and her mixing of styles that influenced lots of performers after her.

Her biggest contribution, though, was her music videos.

"Madonna takes us into a new era," says Rick Krim, VH1's executive vice president for music and talent programming. "The new eligibles from the MTV era will be different from those who came before them. And Madonna emerged as one of the icons of the video era."

When Madonna made her debut in 1982 with the dance single "Everybody," she seemed like just another dance pop singer, like the countless ones who would follow, from Regina and Martika to Stacey Q and Pebbles.

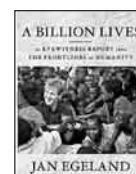

Once she figured out how to use music videos to sell her image as well as her songs, Madonna, with the help of MTV, was soon in a league of her own.

"She is still a musical and cultural icon," Krim says. "She's always finding a way to impact culture and changing with the times. She's always looking ahead." GLENN GAMBOA (NEWSDAY)

Actress for All Ages

Patricia Clarkson sops up the roles, no matter how old she is

RANGE | Maturity has been no obstacle to actor Patricia Clarkson, who keeps getting cast — and in damn good roles, to boot.

"There are not that many parts for women north of 45," she says. "I'm more the exception than the rule, and I don't know why. Maybe work begets work and I stay in people's minds."

Perhaps best known for her Emmy-winning turn as Aunt Sarah on "Six Feet Under," Clarkson says she chooses projects because of the script, the character, and/or the cast and director. Another consideration is variety. "I'm always looking for new territory in the roles I play," she says. "When I was a younger woman, I was often cast as the suburban mom. I've gotten away from that one, thank God."

She certainly has. In a career spanning almost 25 years, Clarkson has tackled a spectrum of roles on Broadway, television and film. In recent years, she's played a grieving artist in "The Station Agent"; the benign psychotherapist in "Lars and the Real Girl"; and the terminally ill mother in "Pieces of April" on-screen. For "April," Clarkson garnered a host of accolades, including Academy Award, Golden Globe and Screen Actors Guild Award nominations.

Starting March 21, she can be seen in the independent film "Married Life as Pat" as the efficient and seemingly guileless wife of an adulterous husband (Chris Cooper) who's planning her murder. The movie is set in the late 1940s in a posh Connecticut suburb. "Pat is a sexy, emotional, sporty girl, but she's also contradictory," notes Clarkson. "The challenge was to keep her soft and vulnerable, even though she's sporty. She is a woman of her period."

She is also very much at home in the world of independent films, though she has no shortage of studio films to her credit. "I love doing both," she says. "Unlike studio films, independent films have a fast shooting schedule for high-metabolism actors. It suits me. It's more risky, more intimate, and more relaxed than a studio film. On the other hand, there's nowhere to sit all day," she says with a laugh.

The Trend That HGTV Built

Mortgage crisis or not, Americans tune in to real estate shows

DREAMING | Real estate may have cooled considerably as an investment, but not real estate television.

House flipping and home renovation programs are still big hits on cable. While "for sale" signs sprout on lawns across the country, TV programmers are like developers who plow ahead with new housing projects anyway.

A new season of the A&E Network's "Flip This House" — one of a troika with TLC's "Flip That House" and Bravo's "Flipping Out" — premieres Saturday night.

A&E has several new programs in development. At least six new ones are beginning on TLC in the next year, starting with "Date My House," where former "Bachelor" Bob Guiney hosts a program on which potential buyers spend a night in a home on the market.

HGTV had its highest prime-time ratings ever in January. Nine of its top 10 series deal with the housing market, including "House Hunters," "My First Place," "Hidden Potential," "Buy Me" and "Design to Sell." The network did a special Feb. 29 theme day of "taking the big leap," or investing in that first house.

"What's driving interest right now is that people are worried about it — 'What's the value of my home? How can I increase interest in my home?'" said Jim Samples, HGTV president. "And then there's the 'life goes on' factor. People are still changing jobs, families are still getting bigger. If anything, they tend to nest in this environment."

Samples admitted, though, that one of his first questions last fall upon taking over HGTV was how the housing market downturn would affect HGTV's programs.

HGTV essentially built itself on the public fascination with property. At its start, the network had shows on crafts and landscaping, but now the home is the focus. DAVID BAUDER (AP)

Celebration of Stereotypes

NERD ALERT | Give the CW credit for guts. While other networks avoid competing with “Idol,” the fledgling network has scheduled new shows right in the teeth of Fox’s ratings tsunami. Tonight marks the season premiere of “Beauty and the Geek” (8 p.m., CW), the reality TV “social experiment” that asks shy guys of the pocket-protector set to compete and cooperate with brash and attractive women who have never cracked a book.

This season's challenges will include the geeks appearing as in-studio guests of Dr. Drew's on "Love-line" and providing "make-unders" to the beauties. The ladies will be given the unthinable task of unclogging pipes. Tune in — stereotypes are on the march. KEVIN MCDONOUGH

King salmon may help Eskimo fishermen sustain their lifestyle

Bragging doesn't come naturally to Marvin Okitkun, but the Yup'ik Eskimo fisherman doesn't miss a beat when talking up king salmon, the valuable fish that makes life possible for villagers on the cash-poor Yukon River delta.

"Once you've tried our salmon, you wouldn't want to have any other salmon from any other place," Okitkun said. "To us, everything else is hype."

The sterling reputation of the Yukon king is buoying the fragile economies of the tiny delta villages, which are among the state's poorest communities. Strikingly high fuel costs and disastrously low fish counts in the last decade have pushed the mostly Alaska Native region deep into poverty.

To survive, local fishermen have immersed themselves in the language and mind-set of the modern gourmet in what has become a successful courtship of the upscale commercial seafood market.

With help from a federal fisheries program, they are learning to tout the fish's exceptionally high fat content and lifetime in the wild as sources of health benefits and superior flavor.

The fish naturally store enough fat to survive the 2,000-mile journey up the Yukon to spawn. Most wild salmon swim shorter distances and build up less fat as a result.

"Yukon salmon come from well-managed salmon runs, and they are not farm-raised," said Eunice Alexie, 43, of Pitka's Point. "They're all-natural, with 34 percent healthy omega-3 oils."

Alexie recently traveled from her Yup'ik Eskimo village of 110 people to the Boston International Seafood Show to showcase the Yukon fish for Kwik'Pak Fisheries. The company was created in 2002 through a federally sponsored nonprofit to help delta residents secure a niche in the cutthroat international salmon market.

An Upstream Battle

"We want to build an economy based on the fishery," said Jack Schultheis, Kwik'Pak's Anchorage-based sales manager. "We don't have anything else."

Foodies are responding to the marketing push by Kwik'Pak and the few smaller processors left on the delta. Several newspapers and seafood publications have featured the Yukon king in culinary write-ups since the campaign took off several years ago. The fish appeared on Food & Wine magazine's "Best New Ingredients" list of 2008.

"I've been serving Yukon salmon each season for three years," said David LeFavre, executive chef of the tony seafood restaurant Water Grill in Los Angeles. "I think it's got great fat content. It sears up, grills and sautees incredibly nicely."

But the fishery needs more than good publicity to survive. The Yukon delta is hundreds of miles from the state highway and railroad systems. Local villages can accommodate only small planes on their air strips, pushing up shipping costs.

Annual returns of the two main salmon species in the summer fishery — king and chum — have roller-coastered in recent years.

In the late 1990s, western Alaska's salmon stocks plummeted for reasons that remain unclear. The state declared the area a disaster in 2000. It cut short the commercial season but allowed fishing for local consumption to continue.

Fish buyers quit the region. Commercial fishing resumed in 2002, but the fish have never quite recovered. The state may set strict limits on commercial fishing again this summer to make sure enough salmon reach their spawning grounds. The fish are essential to the local lifestyle, said Okitkun, one of 600 people in the village of Kotlik.

"I'd say subsistence foods ... are the majority of our diet," Okitkun said. "A lot of it is salmon. My parents and other elders in town, they have dried salmon every day."

The Neckties That Bind

Business

Politicians with very different platforms choose the same look

Shep and Ian Murray have never run for president, but men wearing their neckties have, which has been very good for business.

During the 2004 presidential campaign, George Bush, John Kerry and Howard Dean all sported ties made by Vineyard Vines, the Murrays' Stamford, Conn.-based apparel company that has its spiritual home on Martha's Vineyard, the island off Cape Cod that the brothers consider a home away from home.

Bill Clinton (who spent many presidential summers on the Vineyard), Bill Frist (who frequents Nantucket, as does Kerry) and Rudy Giuliani have all been spotted in Vineyard Vines, too.

"Everybody wanted us to take sides," Shep Murray, 37, recalled in a recent interview at the Vineyard

Rudy Giuliani is one of many politicians who wear preppy Vineyard Vines neckties.

Vines store in Greenwich, where the brothers grew up and still live.

"What are we going to do, say we are Republicans or Democrats and lose half our customers?" Shep Murray said. (For the record, Shep Murray is registered as a Democrat, and Ian Murray is unaffiliated, according to Greenwich public records.)

The unsolicited political endorsements led to a flurry of publicity, exposing Vineyard Vines' playful, preppy brand to the nation's farthest reaches. Last year, sales were "well over $50 million," up more than 100 percent in two years, according to Shep, the elder of the brothers.

Initially their company's only employees, the Murrays now oversee a staff of about 120 and a ballooning product line that includes shirts, shorts, skirts, belts, boxer shorts, totes, jackets and just about anything else they and their friends might need, should their luggage ever get lost on the way to Key Largo.

Still tiny compared with competitors such as J. Crew, Vineyard Vines has lately focused on retail expansion, mainly through partnerships with family-owned haberdashers who operate Vineyard Vines-theme stores, replete with blown-up photographs of Shep and Ian Murray, 33, living it up on the Vineyard. There are six stores so far, including one in Memphis, Tenn., that opened in February.

This summer, a store will open in America's most famous political neighborhood: Georgetown.

Shep and Ian Murray founded Vineyard Vines in 1998 after quitting corporate jobs in New York, a story they like to tell.

The brand is supposed to convey fun, and the story tells of two guys who weren't finding enough of it on the Metro-North train line between Greenwich and New York, where they worked in advertising and public relations.

Scarcely able to bear the thought of returning to work after a 1998 family vacation in the British Virgin Islands, they brainstormed ideas for something they could sell that would represent high living. They came up with neckties, which struck them as simple, portable and variable essentially blank canvases for the iconography of affluence.

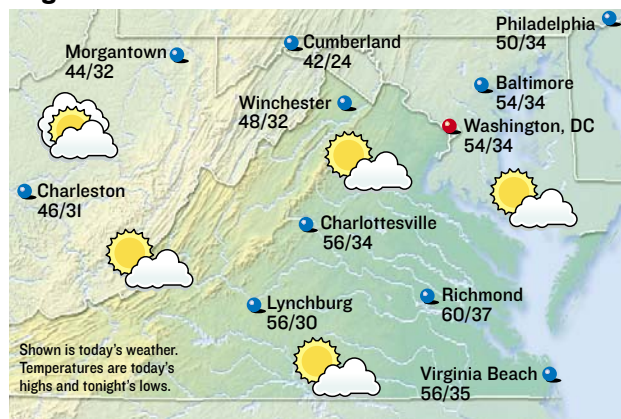

"It was one-size-fits-all," Shep Murray said. "But it also said something about that person: 'I like fishing,' 'I like golf,' 'I like martinis and cigars.' It was a way for people to take the good life to work with them."

L.A. Fashion Week is becoming chock-full of celebrity designers

Just as L.A. Fashion Week took a step forward, the celeb-as-designer trend seems to have sent it two steps back.

Though the presence of more legitimate designers has grown over the past few years, fashion regulars Sue Wong, Kevan Hall and Ed Hardy are not showing Fall 2008 collections at Culver City's Smashbox photo studios this week.

So, as Fashion Week got under way Sunday, the spotlight turned to the likes of "Hills" star Lauren Conrad, Nicky Hilton and the Pussycat Dolls.

Wong, for one, calls the emerging trend "absolutely bogus."

But Smashbox co-founder Davis Factor says the week "is for everybody," from established designers to showbiz types.

"Sure, every celebrity and his brother wants to be a fashion designer," said Wong, who has been designing since 1968. "It's not like anybody can pick it up and do it. It's a science. You need to know fit and construction."

"I don't believe in reality TV stars turning into designers or a music mogul or a flash-in-the-pan turning into a designer," Wong said, acknowledging lines by Sean "Diddy" Combs and Jennifer Lopez. "It's all about merchandizing and them trying to capitalize on their 15 minutes of fame. I don't think those kind of houses can be taken seriously. What can be taken seriously is a real, bona fide talent."

Is that the case for Conrad?

The 22-year-old, known for starring roles on the hit MTV reality shows "Laguna Beach" and "The Hills," has cast her style influence long and wide this year on the red carpet and with her own casual Lauren Conrad Collection, available online. Magazine covers have sailed her way — exposure not easily available to up-and-coming designers.

"I think my involvement in reality television has played a bittersweet role in my career," Conrad said in an email to The Associated Press. "If I wasn't on TV, I wouldn't have my line. But because I'm on TV, people don't take me seriously."

And there's the rub.

Conrad, who has trained at the Fashion Institute of Design and Merchandising in Los Angeles, describes her line as "California chic," basing this season on a recent trip to Paris reflected in simple, clean pieces accessorized with berets, netting, leather gloves, bows and lace.

"Let's see whether she can survive and thrive," said Wong.

This season's 22 shows include Nicky Hilton's high-end Nicholai line and artsy L.A.-based Whitley Kros, designed by Sophia Coloma and actress Marissa Ribisi, the wife of alt-rocker Beck.

The closing slot will be filled by more saucy fare: a Pussycat Dolls lingerie line designed by their founder, Robin Antin. SOLVEJ SCHOU (AP)

Gloss Gets Serious

We've never held lip gloss to the same standards as traditional lipsticks. Gloss is more Marilyn than Jackie — shiny and fun, but not enduring. So, when presented with L'Oréal's INFALLIBLE LIP GLOSS ($10, drug-stores) and its promise of six-hour wear, we were, understandably, skeptical. But we were pleasantly surprised when we found that the formula does, indeed, last longer than most glosses and survived both an ice cream sandwich and a glass of wine. (Yes, it may be time to re-stock the fridge.) The color's life span was closer to three hours than six, but it's still an impressive feat for a traditionally ditz product.

Flee, Flyaways

We have so many flyaways it appears that we brush our hair with steel wool to break lots of random strands, then rub a balloon on our heads to set them adrift in a static-y breeze. Most stuff that flattens them does it by weight — slather enough heavy goop on something, and it'll lie flat. PAUL MITCHELL SUPER SKINNY RELAXING BALM ($16, see Paulmitchell.com for stores) works without clumping flyaways onto nearby hairs by means of sticky goo. It's unclear how it does it, actually — it just does. And it smells like apples! HOLLY J. MORRIS (EXPRESS)

Hot Tranny Mess

Annapolis native and winner of the fourth season of "Project Runway" CHRISTIAN SIRIANO was online Monday and discussed his victory and plans for the future.

Hello, Fierce One. I would like to know what on Earth it means to be a "tranny mess" and how can I not be one?

That's fabulous. Being a tranny mess just means that you need to work on your style and your presence and your hair and makeup and your all-around persona. So if you follow in my footsteps, you will never be a hot tranny mess.

Where do you think your talent comes from? At first, I didn't like you, but then as the show progressed, I began really pulling for you. Do you get a lot of that in life?

For me, the fashion and design comes from my family being so supportive of creativity and the arts. My great-grandmother was a furrier, and on the Siriano side of the family there are a lot of Italian tailors. The German side of my family is very hardworking, so they pushed me to succeed. When I first meet people, they never have negative comments about me. Being on a reality show, it takes a few episodes to get to know someone.

Have you seen Amy Poehler's impression of you on "Saturday Night Live"? Was it fierce or a hot tranny mess?

I did see "SNL" and had the pleasure of meeting Amy and being in the "SNL" studio, which is in the same building as Bravo. It was so funny, and it was kind of scary that she looked so much like me. It was definitely a fierce show.

AMERICAN STEEL. GLOBAL STRENGTH. GLOBAL SOLUTIONS.

America's steelmakers set an environmental standard the world's steelmakers should follow.

American steelmakers lead the way in recycling and environmental performance. We're ahead of Kyoto greenhouse emission goals by 240 percent, and we're developing innovative technologies to continue setting new benchmarks. Unfortunately, not all global steelmakers share this commitment. Lax environmental standards are one way some overseas steelmakers aren't shouldering their fair share. Protecting the Earth is a global responsibility that requires global solutions. Because there's one single place we all call home.

Is That Hot or Not? Readers Talk Back

I just had to comment on "D.C. Dating's" letter [Feb. 5], concerning men who are attracted only to hot women. Women reaching their beauty prime by 16? Please! I, for one, am VERY thankful that I have matured in attraction since 16. I think women are just coming into themselves at 30. I personally think the relationship drama of the 20s and a realization of who we are is what make us ready for marriage in our 30s. Granted, everyone's different, but this is my take. Some women do find their soul mates in their 20s. Others haven't met the right person and don't want to be married just for the sake of it. This guy needs to give women a little more credit. — D.C.-AREA WOMAN

"But we DO have a lot in common. You are a young, hot chick, and I happen to date young, hot chicks."

ERIC REECE

I agree that a man who truly has difficulty finding anyone older than mid-20s attractive — and who thinks that sexiness peaks at 16 — most likely has some stuff going on that's preventing him from being happy.

At the very least, he's sabotaging himself, consciously or unconsciously. Then again, maybe it's because I haven't figured how to "check my gender at the door" (Does it go on the coat hook or the shoe rack?). Read on.

It's a shame you made sport of a reader's search for understanding by suggesting the problem was his. The truth is that many men echo his sentiment but are too afraid to voice their feelings. I took a poll of single, 35- to 49-year-old, white-collar men, and they totally agreed with this writer. They would rather not date an unattractive partner; almost all of them preferred younger. I just hope other men have the intestinal fortitude to express similar concerns! A realistic answer would have been that, to obtain attractive women, one needs money, power, looks, a great personality or some combination thereof. Please be a counselor and check your gender at the door! — NO NAME

And here when I think of intestinal fortitude, I think of climbing Everest. I guess I forgot those courageous and noble souls with the courage to lob catcalls at schoolgirls!

Actually, I think you do the guy who wrote in a disservice to suggest that he is just destined to be unhappy. On the contrary, I think by engaging in a little exploration about what's going on, he can be helped in finding love and eventually be quite satisfied. Your friends' preference for somewhat younger women is not at all the same thing as finding everyone unattractive who is old enough to have their car insurance rates to go down.

I also think you do women a disservice by suggesting that money and power are automatic aphrodisiacs. Everyone has different tastes, and physical chemistry is, of course, a necessity for a happy romantic relationship. But to honestly believe that that chemistry is dependent on the date that someone was born — or the numbers in a bank account — means that something's getting in the way of your following your heart.

GUINEA PIG

Hatch a Plan

■ Yolk is such a confusing thing. It's way more caloric than egg whites (which seems bad), but it has more nutrients (which seems good) and it's also the part that is actually tasty (which seems very good).

So, Egg Beaters is attempting to give confused breakfast eaters a hand by providing a new kind of carton with an added "touch" of yolk. The idea is that it's still healthier than cracking shells—the stuff has 75 percent less cholesterol and half the calories of what a chicken lays. And it boasts more flavor than the rubbery original.

To test the yumminess claim, we got to scrambling and then chowing down. As one might suspect, the finished product was the right hue of yellow (thanks, food coloring!) and more eggish than the original. But will they make you forget your sunny-side up cravings? Not a chance. VICKY HALLETT (EXPRESS)

THE MISFITS

Just Breathe

Q I think I may have some form of exercise-induced asthma, triggered by cool temperatures. My throat tightens and starts to close, and I cough up gunk. I used to be OK unless the temperature was below 55 degrees, but now it's to the point where temperatures around 70 degrees trigger the problem, even indoors. Is there anything I can do to alleviate this, hopefully without resorting to medication? — DEBORAH

■ Inhalers have a not-so-sexy reputation — on the hipness scale of medical supplies, they probably fall somewhere between bifocals and EpiPens. (Although, have you seen Puffapouch.com? Wrapped in a camo print, those things actually seem pretty hard-core. But I digress.)

Anyway, regardless of how cool they are, they're darned useful for that whole breathing thing we human beings like to do, and it sounds as if it's time for you to come to terms with the possibility that you need one.

There are techniques folks can try if their asthma really attacks only when it's chilly outside, notes Frank J. Mayo, a Maryland-based pulmonologist. It's the cold, dry air coming in through the mouth that can trigger an asthma attack, so he advises winter athletes to wrap up. "Some people suggest you wear a muffler. Most of us breathe through our noses in that case, and it warms up the air," he explains.

Running around in 70-degree-plus weather with a heavy scarf, however, doesn't seem like a good solution for you. And the fact that your woes seem to be worsening warrants a medical look-see. If, indeed, you have asthma, you could be headed toward a kind that isn't brought on by exercise at all, Mayo says. He recommends you see a pulmonologist, get an inhaler and keep it with you.

It's certainly a better option than continuing to hack up gunk. Ew.

Armed With Triceps Exercises

Tone your arms with the move that's right for your fitness level

Do you feel your arms look flabbier since you turned 40? Age-related muscle loss does take a toll. But three simple strengthening moves are all you need to go sleeveless with confidence — you can see results in less than a month. Try this customizable triceps workout to build firm, shapely arms by spring — whatever your fitness level.

Workout at a Glance

→ WHAT YOU NEED: 3- to 5-pound dumbbells, a 9- to 10-inch diameter ball (like a soccer ball, kickball or medicine ball) and a sturdy chair.

→ HOW TO DO IT: Do this routine two or three times per week on nonconsecutive days, completing eight to 12 repetitions of each exercise. Begin with the "First Try This" move for each exercise. If it's too difficult, follow the "Make It Easier" variation. Not challenging enough? Try the "Make It Harder" option.

FOR QUICKER RESULTS: Do the entire workout twice through. As you get stronger and can breeze through two sets of 12 reps, progress to the next level or use a heavier weight.

Ball Push-Up

→ FIRST TRY THIS: Start on floor in push-up position, either on knees or toes, with hands beneath shoulders and ball under left hand, fingers pointing forward. Inhale as you bend both elbows back, tucking them into sides, and lower chest toward floor. Exhale and push back to start. Repeat. Halfway through set, switch ball to right hand. (Bonus toning: chest, shoulders, torso)

→ MAKE IT EASIER: Skip the ball and place both hands on floor under shoulders.

→ MAKE IT HARDER: Place both hands on ball, wrists facing and fingers spread to sides of ball.

Chair Dip

→ FIRST TRY THIS: Sit on edge of chair with feet flat and grasp chair near hips. Cross right leg over left, resting ankle on left thigh. Shift hips off chair, supporting yourself on hands and left foot. Make sure left knee is over ankle. Bend elbows back, lowering body until arms are bent about 90 degrees, keeping hips near chair. Press into palms, rising back to start position. Repeat. Halfway through set, switch legs. (Bonus toning: shoulders, abs)

→ MAKE IT EASIER: Keep both feet on floor as you dip.

→ MAKE IT HARDER: Place feet on ball for an added balance challenge. Now lower, keeping knees over ankles.

Kickback

→ FIRST TRY THIS: Get down on all fours with knees under hips and hands beneath shoulders, fingers pointing forward. Contract abdominals and extend right leg straight back, level with torso. Grasp a dumbbell in left hand, bending arm to 90 degrees with elbow at side. Exhale and straighten left arm, keeping upper arm still and pressing dumbbell back. Inhale and return to start. After one set, switch sides. (Bonus toning: core and butt)

→ MAKE IT EASIER: Start in the same tabletop position but keep both knees on floor as you extend arm behind you. After one set, switch arms and repeat.

→ MAKE IT HARDER: Stand with weight on right leg, a dumbbell in each hand. Hinge forward from hips, raising left leg behind until torso and leg are parallel to floor. Keeping head in line with spine, bend arms 90 degrees with elbows pulled in to sides. Straighten and bend arms. Halfway through set, switch legs. ## BODY TALK

One-Person Pillow Fight

■ The most unlikely aid to your leg exercise? Bed pillows — they can make your legs stronger. When men attempted single-leg squats while standing on a cushy surface, their hips and leg muscles worked up to 13 percent harder, report Mayo Clinic researchers. It's a tricky maneuver, however, because you can easily lose your balance. If you can do three sets of 10 wobble-free single-leg squats while standing on a hard floor, bring on the pillow. OVERNIGHT SENSATION: Ragnar Relays are party fueled by sleep deprivation.

Spend a Thrilling Night on The Run

Running approximately 200 miles nonstop doesn't sound like a good time. But add in 11 of your friends to share the distance, two vans to carry supplies and maybe matching costumes, and you have an "adult slumber party." At least, that's how Tanner Bell, director of race development for Ragnar Events, describes his company's signature overnight relays.

What began as an experiment in Utah has now become a national network of all-night-long races, and this September, Ragnar is debuting its D.C.-area course. It's a 182-mile-long route that starts in Cumberland, Md., before weaving its way down the C&O Canal and culminating in a finish-line fiesta with live bands and tons of grub at East Potomac Park. (Registration opened yesterday. See Ragnarrelay.com for info.)

The concept is fairly simple — sort of. Teams divide into two groups of six, and each takes over a van. At the start, Van One drops off a runner, then drives ahead to pick up him or her and drop off the second. This continues until leg seven, when the sixth runner gets a lift from Van One, and Van Two starts unloading its runners. Van one takes a breather, and then repeats the process at leg 13. Got it?

Each person runs three legs of about five miles each, and at least one leg is smack in the middle of the night, when flashlights are key.

"It's a party, but it's equal parts accomplishment," Bell says. And although it's undoubtedly challenging, it helps that the runners get breaks between their runs — anywhere from four to seven hours, depending on how quick their teammates are. "Beginning runners to marathoners can both run it, even on the same team," he adds.

Going for speed is the traditional way to snag a prize, but all competitors get technical T-shirts, and all finishers get medals. And even if you're not the speediest, you can earn accolades by showing spirit, decorating your vans, wearing absurd outfits (leather bustiers, anyone?) or picking a brilliant team name.

Naming is important to the Ragnar crew because of the process they went through to pick out their moniker. One of the founders had always called rugged folks “Ragnars” because he had known two rough dudes named Ragnar, Bell explains. “Then we found out that Ragnar was also the name of a ninth-century Norse king and wild man,” he says. “That really fit into the spirit of the race.”

Just skip the pillaging, OK?

Strong Language Encouraged

Desi Bartlett gets you sweating in Spanish, English or even Spanglish Blends are big in the fitness world right now — someone's bound to combine Pilates and kickboxing any day now. But it's for a very good reason: It's smart to challenge one's body in as many ways as possible, and left to sweat it out on their own, most people fall into a rut.

"They either want weight loss, so they go with cardio, or they want to tone up, and they go with weights. And unless they're doing yoga, they don't think about flexibility at all," complains Desi Bartlett, a 17-year veteran of the exercise industry. So she's developed "3-in-1 Total Body Fitness" ($15, Acacialifestyle.com), a series of three 20-minute segments devoted to cardio, strength and stretching.

Some moves target more than one goal, of course. Bartlett's a fan of inserting a "balance challenge" into her cardio routine, and heart rates keep pumping even when she leads the audience in dumbbell work. One favorite exercise to cover all the bases: around-the-world lunges.

Squat to one side, lunge forward, squat to the other side, then, lunge backward. "It's cardio, it's resistance training and you're using your full range of motion," Bartlett brags.

But what makes her three-in-one concept truly unique is that it also refers to the number of language tracks on the DVD. There's English, Bartlett's native tongue. There's Spanish, which Bartlett learned while living in Mexico. And there's Spanglish, a combination of the two, which has her alternating words like "biceps" with "bueno."

It's the first time there's been a major exercise DVD release with a Spanglish option, which Bartlett predicts will appeal to second-generation Hispanics like her, as well as people hoping to pick up some of either language. English speakers, in particular, can learn quite a bit from Bartlett's commentary. What gringos would call "saddlebags" is a favorite Spanish term of hers, "pistolas." "It's the like the part of the body that are the gun holders," she explains.

So, with the extra brain game, make that a four-in-one workout. Spanglish fans, expect more titles from Bartlett, including Latin dance and yoga. VICKY HALLETT (EXPRESS)

Leagues Apart

■ So, you say you want to play flag football? Just make sure you're not out of your league (or underwhelmed by it).

The sport has very different definitions for Joe Paternoster, head of NAKID (No Adult Kickball Isn't Dumb, Playnakid.com) — which is launching a flag-football program in April — and Mark "Madcap" Capozzoli, co-founder of NOVAFFL (Novaffl.com), which begins its fourth season at the end of March.

"Linemen go at it pretty hard. It's none of this hands-at-the-waist stuff. It's basically like an underground fight club," says Capozzoli. Paternoster, on the other hand, makes a big deal about NAKID's use of soft Nerf footballs. While Paternoster says only overly competitive folks have been turned away from his league's teams, at NOVAFFL, expect the opposite. "We want people who are committed, so we screen out deadbeats," Capozzoli says. If you're unfit, "you'll get insulted."

NAKID is more about socializing than scoring. "Who cares if you go undefeated? I've met people I'll be friends with for the rest of my life," says Paternoster. The same is true of NOVAFFL — just expect your pals to have battle wounds. V.H.

Tea Time

Credit the Brits for penicillin, William Shakespeare and Clive Owen. But their signature contribution to society will always be tea time, especially as more and more research indicates that a teacup holds many health benefits. What, exactly, those benefits are depends on the color of your bag.

White

WHAT IT IS: Leaves from the bud are flash-steamed and dried, so it's the least processed form with the most antioxidants and the least caffeine. A light, delicate flavor.

WHAT IT DOES: White tea is kryptonite for viruses and bacteria, says Milton Schiffenbauer, a professor of microbiology at Pace University. In his studies, "tea destroys over 80 percent of viruses within 10 minutes," he says. Due to the higher levels of antioxidants, white tea may be the most powerful when it comes to cancer prevention. Researchers at the University of Oregon found that it was the best tea for inhibiting cell mutations — often the early stages of cancer.

TRY IT! The Republic of Tea's Honeydew White ($14 for 50 bags). That doesn't seem like a bargain compared with the multipacks of Tetley black you can get at the grocery store, but for a premium line of premium tea, it's a great deal.

Black

WHAT IT IS: Leaves are exposed to the air and turn black due to oxidation. A stronger, more traditional taste.

WHAT IT DOES: The majority of related research shows that the black brew significantly reduces heart attack, stroke and death from cardiovascular disease in women. It may also help prevent clogged arteries, improve blood vessel functioning and lower blood pressure. Six cups per day may provide resistance to microbial infections and possibly tumors, while two cups has been shown to ward off urinary tract cancer. And it contains enough fluoride to successfully fight cavities.

TRY IT! Lipton's Vanilla Caramel Truffle premium tea ($3.50 for 20 bags). Smells like dessert and tastes that way, too. The funnel-shaped tea bag means the leaves have room to expand in the hot water, resulting in a stronger, more flavorful cup.

Green

WHAT IT IS: Leaves are steamed or cooked prior to oxidation. A crisper but less powerful taste than black.

WHAT IT DOES: Asian countries have lower rates of many cancers and a high consumption rate of green tea. Coincidence? No way: The chemicals in green tea have been shown to bond with and destroy cancer cells, and women who drank 10 or more cups per day had a 43 percent reduction in cancer risk. Green tea may also slow the spread of breast cancer and protect smokers from lung cancer. More good news: An unknown component in the tea has lowered tissue fat levels in mice.

TRY IT! Ito En's Green Jasmine ($2 for 16.9 oz.). Clean and light, this no-cal iced brew makes it easy to drink those five cups — three bottles will give you that and more. (REPRINTED WITH PERMISSION OF WOMEN'S HEALTH MAGAZINE © RODALE INC.)

→ DRINKING UP

Forget Coffee — It's in the Bag

A steady stream of research shows that antioxidant polyphenols in tea fight heart attack, stroke, some cancers and even bad breath. If you still haven't been converted in to a tea drinker, these three new studies might convince you:

→ TAIWANESE RESEARCHERS studying 1,000 people found that those who averaged just two cups of tea — black, green or oolong — once per week for 10 years had 20 percent lower body fat and 2 percent lower waist-to-hip ratios compared with those who didn't drink tea.

→ USDA SCIENTISTS recently reported that 15 people cut their mildly elevated cholesterol by 7 percent and their "bad" LDL cholesterol by 11 percent after just three weeks of drinking five daily cups of black tea. "A cup or two a day for a longer period should also work," says Joseph Judd, Ph.D.

→ AUSTRALIAN RESEARCHERS who studied 218 women found that for each one-cup increase in tea consumed daily (up to four cups), systolic (top number) blood pressure dropped two points and diastolic (bottom number) pressure dropped one point. TEA NO EVIL: Seth Goldman's Bethesda office is a mecca for green living. Everyone on staff has a bike with which to commute.

Trying for His Bottle

Behind the scenes with the founder of Bethesda-born Honest Beverages

Perhaps no one has ever been as parched as Seth Goldman, the founder and TeaEO of Honest Beverages, the bottled tea biz from Bethesda that's grown into a national sensation. While fans may dig the "just a tad sweet" flavors for leisurely sipping, the company grew out of Goldman's need to hydrate after logging countless miles during his regular runs.

Water was too blah, and other options bordered on candy. "I've always been thirsty for a drink without that much sugar," he says. Tea was a time-tested (and anti-oxidant-packed) choice: "They weren't drinking Gatorade 200 years ago." Plus, it has far more health benefits than any sports drink — it can aid in digestion, can fight tooth decay, act as an antibacterial agent and even lower cholesterol.

Goldman has strived to get other functional food benefits into those bottles, too. The current lineup boasts the health food world's buzziest products, including pomegranate, acai, mangosteen, goji berry and yerba mate.

"Just because we found it doesn't mean it should be an ingredient, though," Goldman says. No fad finds a home at Honest Tea unless it can be sourced in large enough quantities from an organic producer. (The company prides itself on using only organic whole tea leaves.)

Of course, it also has to taste good with tea. "There's this thing that tastes like liquid death — noni. That's how we initiate new salespeople. We tell them, 'You have to taste this,'" he says.

But expect more trendy health foods to make appearances. The whole Honest Tea team is constantly on the prowl for stuff that will wow their customers. Ever heard of cupuasu? "It's a fruit with a milky coconut taste that's high in antioxidants," Goldman explains.

Today, the task of working with such new flavors falls to Michael Petrone, the company's brewmaster. He landed the gig two years ago as an intern, when he developed "Pomegranate Blue," one of the company's top sellers.

Petrone works in the downtown Bethesda office in his laboratory

— a corner of the staff kitchen. Tea canisters line the shelves, a well-stocked spice rack offers the likes of mint and cinnamon, a fridge is dedicated to his fruit nectars (green acerola juice concentrate?).

"It's challenging sometimes to get a taste that's competitive with organic ingredients," he explains. "We can't load up on sugar." Instead, he obsesses about the quality of the tea, and then sweetens as necessary with something from his cabinet of tricks: agave, ginger syrup, brown rice syrup, maple syrup or honey. The idea, he says, is to let the tea shine through. But it can't be too esoteric — "it's got to taste good not just to fancy palates," says Goldman.

That's a philosophy that's served the company well so far: Coca-Cola just purchased a 40 percent stake in the 10-year-old brand. The company line is that, by partnering up, Honest Beverages can spread its organic goodness to more outlets. And, at least for now, the brewing magic will still be happening in downtown Bethesda. ### SMUG MUG

Brewmaster Michael Petrone's expertise is in making tea that tastes delicious chilled. But even if it's hot stuff you're craving, these preparation tips will make more than just your kettle whistle:

- Never boil water with green tea unless you want it to get bitter.
  - Give black tea a kick by brewing it with cinnamon and maybe cloves. But be frugal with the latter: "Or else you'll think you're drinking a baked ham."
  - Have lemongrass leftovers from cooking Thai food? Put it in green tea.
- Other good additions: peppermint and orange peel.

Use Your Bean to Fix Up Fondue

When it comes to melting, low-fat cheeses have a pretty bad reputation. Which can make it a challenge to create lower-fat fondue (the very name of which means "to melt").

While it is true that cheese makers recently have produced better tasting reduced-fat cheeses, it's the fat that lets them melt smoothly.
This means a healthier fondue has to keep at least some of the fat.

Creating a lighter cheese fondue
that is flavorful and easily coats whatever you dunk into it calls for a simple compromise on the cheese selections and a bit of creativity with the remaining ingredients.

To make the fondue extra-thick and silky without needing additional cheese, this recipe calls for a puree of white beans (such as Great Northern, navy or cannellini). While the beans do add a certain earthiness to the fondue, the sharp cheeses and the assertive ale provide a flavor backdrop that evens things out.

LIGHT CHEDDAR AND ALE FONDUE

TIME: 15 MIN., SERVES 12

INGREDIENTS

- 15 1/2-ounce can white beans, rinsed and drained (such a Great Northern, navy or cannellini)
- 12-ounce bottle dark ale or other beer
- 1 cup grated extra-sharp cheddar cheese
- 1 cup grated reduced-fat sharp cheddar cheese
- 1 teaspoon dry mustard
- 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
- 1/2 teaspoon hot sauce, or to taste

IN A FOOD PROCESSOR, combine the beans and 1/4 cup of the ale. Puree, scraping the sides of the bowl as needed, until very smooth, about four minutes.

In a medium saucepan, combine the bean puree and the remaining ale.
Bring to a boil over medium heat, then reduce heat to simmer. Add the cheeses in handfuls, stirring constantly, until the cheese has melted.

Stir in the dry mustard, Worcestershire sauce and hot sauce. Transfer to a warm fondue pot. (AP)

Secrets &amp; Fries

■ A critical finding in the world of french fry science! Starchy foods that are cooked at high temperatures (including such potato products as tater tots, hash browns and curly fries) form the suspected carcinogen acrylamide. But according to a study in the Journal of the Science of Food and Agriculture, the longer raw fries got to sit in water before they were cooked, the more the acrylamide levels went down (but only if the fries were a light shade of tan). Researchers were unclear about what effect the soaking would have if the fries were allowed to turn a darker hue.

MEDICATION

What You Pay For

■ Everybody may love a good bargain, but it seems humans are wary of too sweet a deal. In a recent study reported in the Journal of the American Medical Association, subjects were given an electric shock. Then, they were given a placebo described as a painkiller. The catch? Some were told their pills cost $2.50, while others were told 10 cents. A whopping 85 percent of the expensive-seeming placebo takers noted a reduction in pain, while only 61 percent of the 10-centers reported the same effect.

DRUGS

Just Saying No-ish

■ First, the good news. Girls won't just give something up because it's no longer cool. And, now, the bad news. The "thing" is pot. This is according to a report published in Prevention Science, which found that deviance-prone boys toned down their toking when teens in general cut back, but their female deviance-prone counterparts weren't swayed by the trends.

Tricks to Save Your Smarts

This guide to gray matters will have your neurons firing

Remember when your high school bio teacher grimly pronounced that once you destroy a brain cell, it's gone for good? She was wrong.

In recent years, revolutionary noggin-scanning technologies such as functional magnetic resonance imaging (fMRI) have allowed researchers to observe living brains at work, and they've found that your 3-pound blob is a dynamic organ. Every time you move or think, neural connections are made, reinforced or lost. The average brain cell makes about 10,000 connections with other cells. But to keep 'em firing, you have to abide by a crucial neuro motto: "Use it or lose it." Brain researchers know that just about everything you do — or don't do, for that matter — contributes to your brain's well-being (or its descent into decrepitude). And they've discovered a number of ways you can help fire up mission control.

Choose Kung Fu Or Hip-Hop

According to a 2007 Columbia University study, hitting the gym may help you sprout new cells in the dentate gyrus, an area of the brain vital to memory. Researchers measured blood volume in the brains of adults who worked out four times per week for four months and found that all that activity sparks the production of more neurons.

GENIUS MOVE: Complexity is the key to a mind-growing workout, says John Ratey, author of "Spark: The Revolutionary New Science of Exercise and the Brain." His favorite activities: dance and martial arts. "Both require you to position different parts of your body simultaneously and in synchronicity — and with dance, you've got to move along to music," he says. "That's a lot of mental stimulation."

Crack Some Eggs

The best brain foods are those that would rot if the power went out. Pick fresh fruits, veggies and lean proteins and avoid the dreaded duo of trans fats (which diminish brain cells' ability to communicate) and high-fructose corn syrup (which can damage cells).

GENIUS MOVE: An ideal breakfast is an egg. The incredible edible contains B vitamins, which enable nerve cells to burn glucose, your brain's major energy source; antioxidants, which protect neurons against damage; and omega-3 fatty acids, which keep nerve cells firing at optimal speed.

Keep on Moving On

The key to remembering facts is to give them your full attention. In a 2006 study at UCLA, participants were asked to memorize information, first while simultaneously counting beeping noises, then without the racket. Neural scans showed the distracted subjects utilized different systems in their brains, causing them to learn less efficiently.

GENIUS MOVE: When you have a crammed to-do list, rather than layer projects, take on one task at a time and change them up every hour. Can't finish something in 60 minutes? Schedule another slot for it later in the day.

Disconnect the Cable

It's tempting to zone out in front of the TV. But too much "Top Chef" may damage your memory because your neurons can barely be bothered to fire when you're glued to the tube. A 2005 study published in Brain and Cognition found that for each additional hour per day a person spent watching TV between the ages of 40 and 59, the risk of developing Alzheimer's later in life rose by 1.3 percent. Yikes.

GENIUS MOVE: Top out at two hours of TV per day. Instead of tuning in, consider brushing up on your Shakespeare or flipping through the latest Sedaris. A 2006 study published in Neuropsychologia found that reading sentences with metaphor or irony stimulates more brain activity than taking in straight-up facts.

Give It a Rest

Getting plenty of snooze time is key to keeping your head on its toes. According to a 2007 Harvard Medical School study, Z's help memories lodge themselves in your brain. The study showed that the brain gathers disparate pieces of information and weaves them into a coherent whole while you're asleep.

GENIUS MOVE: Keep your bedroom cool, quiet and dark. Clock six and a half to eight and a half hours per night and you'll be more brilliant by morning. VALERIE REISS (REPRINTED WITH PERMISSION OF WOMEN'S HEALTH MAGAZINE © RODALE INC.)

hypochondriac

WHAT YOU COULD HAVE BUT PROBABLY DON'T

Do you sweat very little?

Is your hair sparse on both your body and your head? Is it brittle and light in color? Do you have a prominent forehead, and does the gunk in your nose smell bad? You could have HYPOHIDROTIC ECTODERMAL DYSPLASIA, a genetic condition also characterized by dark circles around the eyes and small, pointed teeth. The lack of sweating is a big problem, not a convenience — because they lack a full set of sweat glands, patients can suffer dangerously high body temperatures (hyperthermia). Many need to take cool baths, spray themselves with water or wear wet clothing to regulate their inner thermometers.
